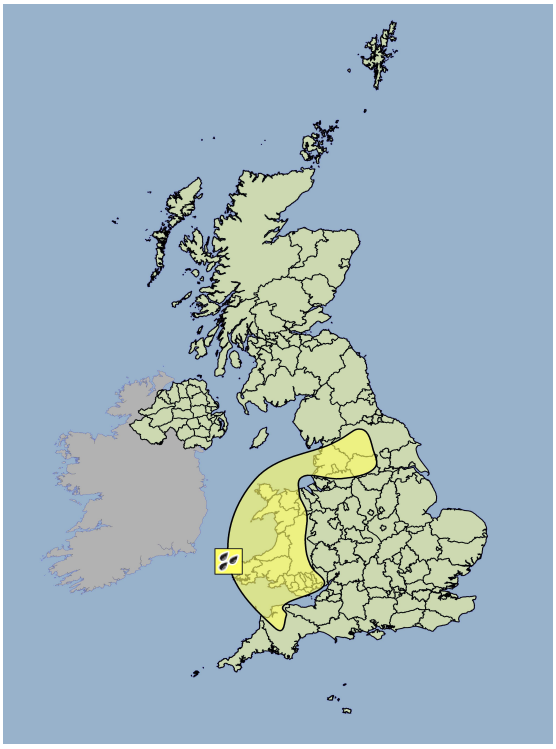
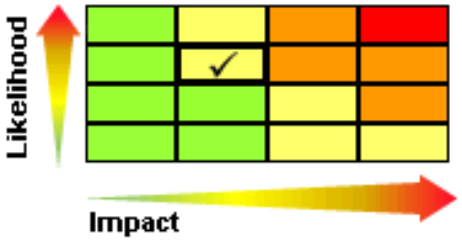
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Mild and moist air, later accompanied by stronger winds, will affect these regions through the next 24 hours. Rainfall accumulations of 40 to 50 mm are likely over many parts through this period, with peak rainfall totals as much as 80-100 mm possible, most likely over higher windward ground of western mid-Wales.

There is still some uncertainty with regard to the detail and persistence of the weather systems causing this precipitation, and further updates are possible.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 12:00 on Mon, 30th Nov 2015 until 12:00 on Tue, 01st Dec 2015

The rain currently falling over much of Wales and northern England is expected to persist through the rest of today and into Tuesday morning, although the rain will ease for a time overnight over northern England. Highest rainfall totals are expected to be across high ground. With the ground saturated over much of this region, rivers are expected to rise in response.

This is a further update to the warning issued yesterday, to realign the areas currently considered most at risk, and to adjust the expected amounts and timings. Please be aware of the potential for disruption from flooding.
